Radar installation near Kloster

1. The radar installation near Kloster was visited on 19 and 23 August 1951. On both days, the installation was in operation and it was observed to revolve 360° seven times per minute. While the head of the installation was rotating, the sound of a two-stroke engine could be heard coming from the back of the house.
2. On 19 August 1951, five soldiers were observed in front of the house. At a sudden shout from the house, they rapidly disappeared into the building. It was observed at the same time that the radar installation had stopped its 360° rotations and was describing an arc of approximately 90°, the dipoles pointing towards the northwest. The head of the installation moved back and forth approximately three or four times and then stopped. The dipoles were then seen to point towards three aircraft which were flying at a great height, three or four miles to the north of the installation. After three minutes, four soldiers reappeared from the house and the installation resumed its slow 360° rotation.

Radar installation near Binz

3. On 16, 18 and 22 August 1951, the radar installation near Binz was visited and on each of these occasions it was observed to be in operation. The greatest number of troops seen near the installation at any one time was eight.

Radio station near Göhren

4. On 18 and 22 August 1951, the position occupied by the mobile radio station near Göhren was visited. On both days the position was empty and all telephone cables had been removed. Children playing near the position stated that the radio van had left on approximately 12 August 1951.
